Drinking Driver – Million Dollar Settlement

Attorney Steve Spencer recently obtained a one million dollar settlement in a head-on collision. Our client sustained serious multiple injuries when the driver of a commercial vehicle crossed over into her lane, striking her head-on. Investigation determined that the driver had been drinking and working long hours which caused him to fall asleep behind the wheel. Our client sustained numerous broken bones and internal injuries, requiring several operations and over five months in a rehabilitation facility.

The insurance adjuster for the responsible driver initially alleged that our client was at fault because her make-up was found strewn about the car after the accident. He contended that “she must have been putting make-up on and caused the accident.” Steve Spencer handled the litigation and was able to settle this case for the million dollar policy limit.

U.S. statistics identify head-on collisions as the most fatal type of road accident and they can happen to anyone at any time. While head-on collisions make up only two percent of all accidents, they account for ten percent of U.S. fatalities. Even when a head-on collision does not claim the life of a victim, the results can be life-changing. Liability in head-on collisions may seem clear, however they require thorough analysis including careful review of the physical evidence and possibly expert reconstruction. Most fatalities could have been prevented if the victim had been wearing a seatbelt. We can't emphasize enough the importance of wearing a seatbelt at all times while driving.

Liability in head-on collisions may seem clear, however they require thorough analysis including careful review of the physical evidence and possibly expert reconstruction.

Steinberg & Spencer is a strong supporter and Community Sponsor of Mothers Against Drunk Driving (MADD). Since 1980, the year MADD was founded, alcohol-impaired traffic fatalities have decreased by more than 50 percent. Even so, in 2007, an estimated 12,998 people were killed nationally. In our client's case, although she survived, her injuries were devastating.
